THORALF KLEIN (ED.)

The Boxer War. Media and Memory of an Imperialist Intervention.

Exploring the media coverage of the Boxer War (1899 - 1901) in Western countries as well as in Chinese provinces, this international volume identifies media as the key link between a historical event and its memory. Moving beyond a narrow definition of media, the contributions include a number of media types that have been rarely, if at all, studied before in this context – for example the analysis of German soldiers' letters, parliamentary debates as a form of performative medium, games and toys, periodicals, adventure novels, and school textbooks as well as archival practices of storing and ordering records –, examining the dynamics between various types of media in a plurimedial setting, explicitly including comparative research.

Tracing the relationship between media and time, this volume also addresses the question how historical memory is transmitted via media to present times and how the Boxer War became a historical point of reference in its own right.
